HAZARD QUOTIENT CALCULATIONS

The hazard quotients (HQs) for lead, arsenic, cadmium, and mercury using the California Office of Environmental Health Hazard Assessment (OEHHA) No Significant Risk Level (NSRL) or Maximum Allowable Dose Level (MADL) were calculated using Equations 1 and 2.

$$D = C \times I \quad \text{Equation 1}$$

Where, D is the exposure dose (mg/day), C is the metal concentration in baby food (mg/kg), and I is the daily intake (kg/day).

$$HQ = D \div HGV \quad \text{Equation 2}$$

Where, HQ is the hazard quotient (unitless), D is the exposure dose (mg/day), and HGV is the health-based guidance value NSRL or MADL (mg/day).

The HQs for arsenic, cadmium, and mercury using the US Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) reference dose (RfD) or the European Food Safety Authority (EFSA) tolerable daily intake (TDI) were calculated using Equations 3 and 4.

$$D = C \times I \div BW \quad \text{Equation 3}$$

Where, D is the exposure dose (mg/kg/day), C is the metal concentration in baby food (mg/kg), I is the daily intake (kg/day), and BW is the bodyweight (kg).

$$HQ = D \div HGV \quad \text{Equation 4}$$

Where, HQ is the hazard quotient (unitless), D is the exposure dose (mg/kg), and HGV is the health-based guidance value RfD, TDI, or adjusted PTWI (mg/kg).

The lifetime adjusted HQs can be calculated when using NSRLs for carcinogens (Equation 5). This calculation accounts for the fact the exposure to baby food will occur over 2-3 years and not lifetime.

$$HQ = (D \div HGV) \times ED \div EL \quad \text{Equation 5}$$

Where, HQ is the hazard quotient (unitless), D is the exposure dose (mg/day), HGV is the health-based guidance value NSRL (mg/day), ED is the exposure duration (2-3 years), and EL is the exposure over a lifetime (70 years).

HEALTH BENCHMARKS

The applicability of the health benchmarks established by regulatory agencies for lead, arsenic, cadmium, and mercury (Table S1) to children consuming baby foods containing metals is limited and must be interpreted with caution. The OEHHA safe harbor levels (NSRLs and MADLs) were developed primarily as regulatory screening thresholds for the general population and are expressed as absolute daily intakes ($\mu\text{g/day}$), without explicit age-specific adjustment. Thus, they do not explicitly account for infants' higher food intake per unit body weight, rapid growth, or heightened toxicokinetic and toxicodynamic sensitivity. The US EPA RfDs and EFSA TDIs are more directly relevant for children risk evaluation because they are normalized to bodyweight and incorporate uncertainty factors intended to protect sensitive subpopulations, including children. However, these benchmarks are generally derived from chronic lifetime exposure scenarios and may not fully capture critical windows of neurodevelopment or other early-life vulnerabilities, particularly for metals such as lead and inorganic arsenic that exhibit non-threshold or low-dose effects. The absence of an RfD or TDI for lead further underscores this limitation, as adverse neurodevelopmental outcomes have been observed at very low exposure levels, making any benchmark-based comparison inherently uncertain. Consequently, while these benchmarks are useful for screening-level comparisons and contextualizing exposure magnitudes, they should not be interpreted as definitive indicators of safety for infants; more health-protective evaluations may require child-specific exposure modeling, consideration of cumulative dietary sources, and comparison against the most conservative endpoints relevant to early-life development rather than reliance on adult- or population-based benchmarks alone.

Table S1. Details of health benchmarks established by regulatory agencies for lead, cadmium, arsenic, and mercury.

Benchmark	Metal	Value	Health endpoint	Derivation / Point of departure	Risk target / Uncertainty	Regulatory purpose
NSRL (OEHHA, Prop 65)	Inorganic As	10 $\mu\text{g/day}$	Cancer	Linear low-dose extrapolation from human epidemiology (skin, lung, bladder cancer) using cancer slope factors	Exposure corresponding to ≤ 1 excess cancer case per 100,000 people over 70-year lifetime	California Prop 65 safe harbor level (warning not required below this level)
NSRL (OEHHA, Prop 65)	Pb	15 $\mu\text{g/day}$	Cancer	Cancer potency estimates and conservative exposure modeling	≤ 1 excess cancer case per 100,000 lifetime risk	Prop 65 cancer safe harbor
NSRL (OEHHA, Prop 65)	Cd	0.05 $\mu\text{g/day}$	Cancer	Animal and human cancer data; linearized multistage modeling	≤ 1 excess cancer case per 100,000 lifetime risk	Prop 65 cancer safe harbor
MADL (OEHHA, Prop 65)	Pb	0.5 $\mu\text{g/day}$	Reproductive / developmental toxicity	NOAEL/benchmark dose from developmental toxicity studies	Uncertainty factors applied to protect sensitive populations	Prop 65 reproductive toxicity safe harbor

Benchmark	Metal	Value	Health endpoint	Derivation / Point of departure	Risk target / Uncertainty	Regulatory purpose
MADL (OEHHA, Prop 65)	Cd	4.1 µg/day	Reproductive toxicity	Animal reproductive toxicity studies (NOAEL/BMD)	UF applied for interspecies and intraspecies variability	Prop 65 reproductive toxicity safe harbor
MADL (OEHHA, Prop 65)	Hg (inorganic and compounds)	0.3 µg/day	Reproductive / developmental toxicity	Developmental toxicity studies; benchmark dose approach	Protective of fetal and infant development	Prop 65 reproductive toxicity safe harbor
RfD (US EPA, IRIS)	Inorganic As	0.3 µg/kg bw-day	Noncancer systemic effects (cardiovascular, metabolic)	Human epidemiological dose-response modeling	Composite uncertainty factor (~3) applied	Federal noncancer health-based guidance value
RfD (US EPA, IRIS)	Cd	1 µg/kg bw-day	Kidney toxicity (proteinuria)	Human renal cortex accumulation; NOAEL	UF applied for human variability and database uncertainty	Federal noncancer health-based guidance value
TDI (EFSA)	Inorganic Hg	0.57 µg/kg bw-day	Kidney toxicity	Benchmark dose modeling from rodent kidney effects	100-fold uncertainty factor (interspecies + intraspecies)	Dietary lifetime intake without appreciable risk

ADDITIONAL DETAILS ON THE DATASET

Descriptive statistics of the dataset used in the study are provided in Table S2. It is critical to note that these data include only nine out of 39 baby food manufacturers; thus, these data are not representative of the entire baby foods market and should be interpreted with caution.

Table S2. Metal concentrations (ppb) data were obtained from nine out of 39 manufacturers of baby food. The detection frequency and range of arsenic, cadmium, lead, and mercury concentrations varied across the nine manufacturers. Additional details are provided in the supplemental Excel file. The descriptive statistics included in this table may not be representative of the entire baby food market and should be interpreted with caution.
